Japs Believed Building New Island Airports

Enemy Long Handicapped By Fields Far Away From Battle Scenes

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12—Recent Japanese activity in the central Solomons raised the possibility today that the Nipponese are building airplane landing strips and bases there to renew their attacks on Guadalcanal and to protect their larger northern installations against American sea and air assaults.

During the last month U. S. planes from Guadalcanal have intercepted several Nipponese warship flotillas in the New Georgia area, about 150 miles northwest of Guadalcanal, and American aircraft have made several raids on enemy concentrations on this island.

Ever since U. S. marines captured the Japanese-built airfield on Guadalcanal, navy men have assumed that the Nipponese would attempt to offset the American advantage by building small airfields either on New Georgia or Santa Isabel island in the central Solomons.

May Have Field

That the enemy may have succeeded in completing a small field, or landing strips, in the New Georgia area was intimated in the navy communiqué which reported that a lone U. S. army flying fortress was attacked by 15 zero fighter planes while on reconnaissance over this island.

It was considered unlikely that the 15 zeros would carry out such a mission from the Jap airfield at Buin, which is nearly 300 miles northwest of Guadalcanal. These planes may have taken off from a field or landing strips on or near New Georgia, but they failed in their purpose, and the fortress escaped after shooting down five Jap planes.

The Nipponese have been active around New Georgia ever since American forces smashed a powerful enemy armada off Guadalcanal November 13-15 and prevented the Japs from reinforcing their isolated garrison on the latter island.

Jap Bases Bombed

Late in November, American aircraft from Guadalcanal bombed enemy installations in the Munda area on New Georgia island and destroyed all buildings in the vicinity. Subsequently, American planes attacked several Jap destroyer flotillas in that area.

According to naval sources, the enemy long has been handicapped in its assaults upon Guadalcanal because planes had to operate either from Buin, on Bougainville island, or from Rabaul, New Britain.

F. D. R. Will Broadcast Christmas Greeting to United States Dec. 24

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12—President Roosevelt, it was announced today, will broadcast a Christmas greeting message to the people of the United States on December 24, as he attends the annual Christmas tree "lighting" ceremony on the South lawn of the White House.

This year, however, the "lighting" will be purely figurative, because the need to conserve electricity has forced the decision that no electric bulbs will be used on any of the White House trees.

On the day before Christmas, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt will be present on the South portico of the White House to witness the annual ceremony and take part in the traditional singing of Christmas carols. It is during these ceremonies — to be held in daylight this year as another electricity conservation measure — that the President will broadcast his greetings to the nation.

NAVY BUILDING PROGRAM HIT BY MARINE OFFICER

Melvin Maas Says Plans Must Be Shifted To Meet New Conditions

SKEPTICAL OF CARRIERS

Emphasis Should Be On Land Based Airplanes, Solon Declares

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12—The Navy's current building program is "top-heavy" in aircraft carriers and probably will have to be modified to meet the swift-changing impact of island warfare, Rep. Melvin J. Maas, ranking Republican member of the House Naval Affairs Committee declared today.

Within the few months since Congress, spurred by the lesson of the Coral sea battle, authorized another 500,000 tons in carriers, Maas said, war tactics have shifted the emphasis to land-based aircraft.

The Minnesota Marine officer whose recent criticism of naval operations in the South Pacific was followed by announcement of a high command "shakeup", expressed a fear that "we may be converting too many tankers and cargo ships to carriers."

Too Many Carriers

"I think we will probably need a modification of our present building program," Maas said. "We are going in too heavily for carriers now—too late."

"We needed a preponderance of carriers at the time the war began. But the nature of island warfare has made a definite change in war tactics."

"I believe the decision will be made by land-based aircraft. I have been fighting to get land-based aircraft in the Navy for years."

Maas, whose criticism of naval command in the southwest Pacific was based on personal observation during a tour of duty as a Marine Aviation Colonel several months ago, qualified his statement in one way. He said he would hesitate to predict what the new Congress might be called on to authorize for the Navy because "by that time—next month" the situation may be changed.

Island Warfare

In the Pacific, he asserted, this country has entered the "island chain" type of warfare. And he added:

INSURANCE MAN NOW DICTATING WAR FASHIONS

NEW YORK, Dec. 12—The war has opened a new style-front for women and tips on "what the well-dressed shop-girl is wearing" are being given by fashion designers.

But safety and accident prevention also is an important factor in Miss America's working attire and insurance companies are urging that designers take this into consideration.

A few of the "musts" to be observed as outlined by one company are:

Washable, starched suits, because starched cloth is less apt to ignite;

No cuffs on sleeves or trousers and elimination of all frills which might catch on machinery;

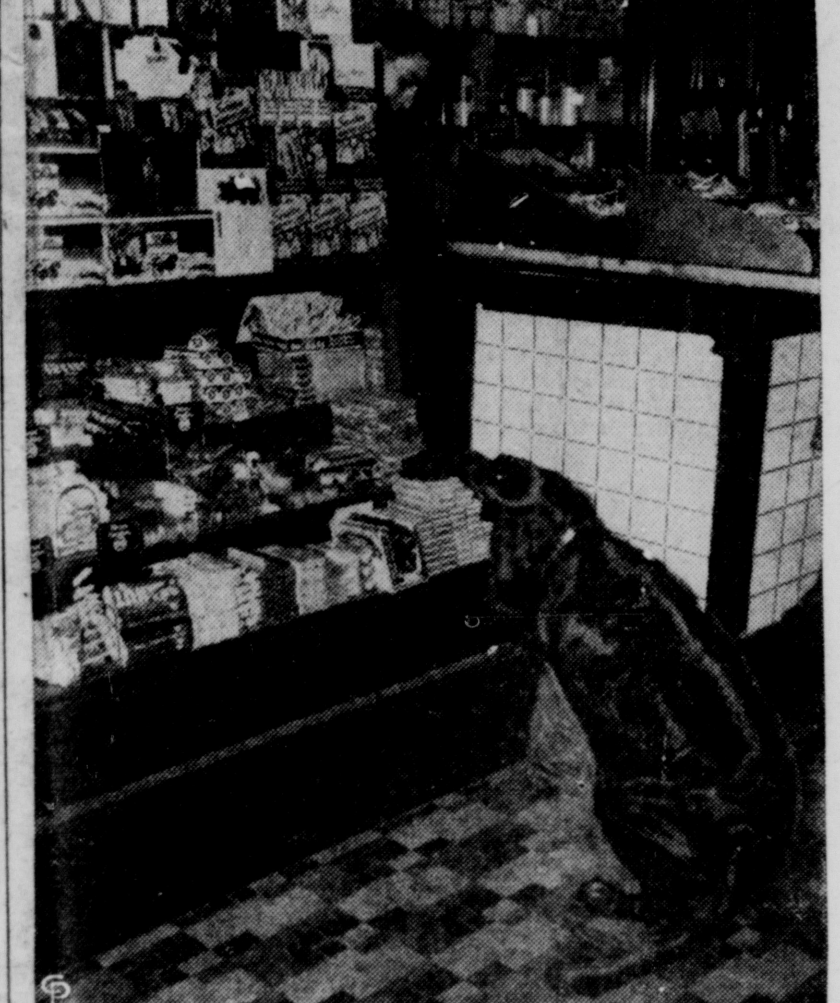

Sensible head-coverings which offer complete protection of hair both from sparks and possible entanglement with machinery;

Safety shoes to prevent injury from falling objects;

Gloves, sufficiently thin to permit the worker to get the "feel" of her job and yet protect her hands from burns and abrasions;

Fire-proof aprons for such jobs as welding.

U. S. Losses Enroute to Battle Fronts Will be Light, Somervell Says

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12—Lieut. Gen. Brehon Somervell, head of army services of supply, declared today that losses of men and equipment going to far off battle fronts will be "very small" because of "thorough preparations" and "foresight and long-distance planning."

Somervell asserted that "the fact that our transports have carried troops and supplies to the four quarters of the globe with practically no losses should encourage us and dismay our enemies."

"There may be those who say we have been lucky," Somervell continued. "That is not the truth. The fact is, before a man set foot aboard ship we were thoroughly prepared."

"We will continue to be prepared."

"But thanks to thorough preparations, to foresight and long-distance planning, they will be very small."

Somervell emphasized that fighting a war on five continents "brings endless complications" in supplying troops not only because of long distances involved, but different climates encountered.

The general explained that 10 tons of equipment were sent to Ireland for every man. He added "that is the ratio of manpower to supplies on our overseas fronts."

Somervell also pointed out that shipping is "one of our principal bottlenecks at this moment" and every ship must be utilized to the "utmost limit" of capacity.

Somervell emphasized that there must be no "interruption, no slowdown" in the journey of any raw material from its source, through processing and production stages, until it reaches an overseas theater of war in the form of a tank, a truck, a shell.

"This is true of everything the army uses, everything it wears and eats, everything on which it travels, in which it lives, with which it fights," Somervell added.

REGISTRATION OF COUNTY YOUTHS MOVES SLOWLY

Registration of Circleville and Pickaway county youths born between July 1, 1924, and August 31, 1924, was progressing slowly Saturday at the Selective Service office with only 12 registered Friday and the first one appearing at 10:30 a. m. Saturday to sign up.

The draft office remains open until 5 p. m. each day, including Saturday, to accommodate 18-year-old youths who have previously not been registered.

The board estimates there are about 100 youths in the county who have become 18 since the registration last June.

First contingent of draftees to fill a December quota is scheduled to leave Circleville early next week for Columbus to go before the army medical team.

U.S. Advised To Beware Of Darlan

French Admiral Says Free Fighters Have No Wish To Impede War

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12 — A philosophical Fighting French admiral who is enroute to London from the Pacific today sought to leave with the American people a clear, dispassionate picture of how he thinks France is reacting to America's deal with Admiral Jean Darlan in North Africa.

Admiral Georges Thierry D'Argeville, commander of the Fighting French forces in the Pacific, said in an interview that he did not think his chief, Gen. Charles de Gaulle, wished to impede the American military operations in North Africa by demanding immediate action against Darlan.

"We know what it is to fight a war," the admiral said. "We also realize how important the military operations in North Africa are at the present time."

"We merely want to say, as one friend to another, 'be careful' of the consequences of the deal with Darlan."

"We are concerned about the reaction among the people of France. The French people are emotional and sensitive. They are going through a tragic situation. They are suffering in the flesh, in the heart and in the spirit."

"One might compare the situation of the French people to that of a condemned prisoner in a cell. The slightest disturbance brings forth a quick reaction to the nerves of that prisoner. He interprets everything in the light of death or liberation."

"Darlan is regarded by the French people as a former warden of their cell. They are fearful lest he return. Therefore, it is necessary for us to keep reassuring them of President Roosevelt's statement that the arrangement with Darlan is only temporary."

The admiral said he thought a solution of the Darlan problem could be found on the basis of the President's statement. He added that he had received an "excellent impression" of the explanation of America's position given him by Secretary of State Cordell Hull on Wednesday.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 12 — The Navy announced today that the 21,936 ton liner, the former President Coolidge, fully loaded with an estimated 4,000 men, had struck a mine and sank in the south Pacific, but that only four men were lost.

The former palatial liner was the largest American transport lost in the present war. The Navy said prompt and efficient rescue efforts limited the casualty list to four men.

The sinking brought to 10 the number of American transports lost in the Atlantic and Pacific, but in each case the loss of life was comparatively small.

The Navy gave no details about the scene of the action except that it occurred "in recent weeks in the south Pacific."

LONDON, Dec. 12—United States and British bombing planes opened up with both barrels against Italy today, streaking out from bases in both Great Britain and Africa to deal savage new blows against Germany's fast-faltering ally.

American heavy bombers based in Egypt staged a violent new attack on the port of Naples coincident with a Royal Air Force raid on Turin — the eighth attack against that northern Italian industrial city since Prime Minister Winston Churchill gave the people of Italy a chance for peace in exchange for overthrow of Premier Mussolini.

New and authentic evidence that Italian dissatisfaction with the regime of Benito Mussolini had broken out openly even before the recent wave of British bombings was reported today from several responsible sources.

The London Evening Standard said that four specific outbreaks had occurred in Italy in August, September and October and that on at least two occasions troops were called out to quell the disturbances.

At Foggia and Monteleone in mid-September, members of the local Fascist militia were said to have joined with thousands of peasants in demonstrations against wage cuts which lasted several days, while at Turin factory workers were said to have occupied the assembly plant of the Fiat Motor Works for three days in August in protest against wage cuts. Troops were called out to halt a Socialist party demonstration at Genoa on October 23, the newspaper said.

50,000 CHILDREN ADDRESS SANTA CLAUS AS MA'AM

New York Woman Brings Christmas To Poverty Stricken Area

ACTIVE FOR FIVE YEARS

First Workroom In Home, But Now Big Quarters House Enterprise

NEW YORK, Dec. 12 — Fifty thousand children can't be wrong. They call Santa Claus "Ma'am."

"Ma'am" is Mrs. Browning Smith, who has been filling Santa's fur-topped boots for five years—to bring Christmas to the poverty stricken children of the southern mountain areas.

This feminine Santa's first workroom was the basement of her New York apartment. Now she works in large headquarters of the Santa Claus party division of the Save the Children Federation—in the midst of dolls, mounds of warm skirts and lumberjackets, stuffed animals and toys of all kinds.

Toys went out to 157 children five years ago—the only Christmas these youngsters received. This year, 50,000 poverty-stricken youngsters, who couldn't even expect candy except for Mrs. Smith's work, will experience the thrill of Christmas. All the children are in Kentucky, Virginia, Tennessee, North Carolina and West Virginia.

Mrs. Smith, wife of an army officer who had returned to New York after 24 years abroad, started being Santa because of a newspaper item, her grandson and a bedraggled doll with a challenging grin.

At breakfast six years ago, she read a newspaper item in which one field worker of the Save the Children Federation reported that 300 children in her district couldn't expect even an orange for Christmas. Mrs. Smith, a native of Tennessee and a summer resident of the state, was familiar with the conditions the field worker described—of families who had cash incomes of less than $100 a year and up to a dozen or more children. She got busy immediately.

"Later in the day I was walking with my 5-year-old grandson, Peter, and I was telling him about the situation," she said.

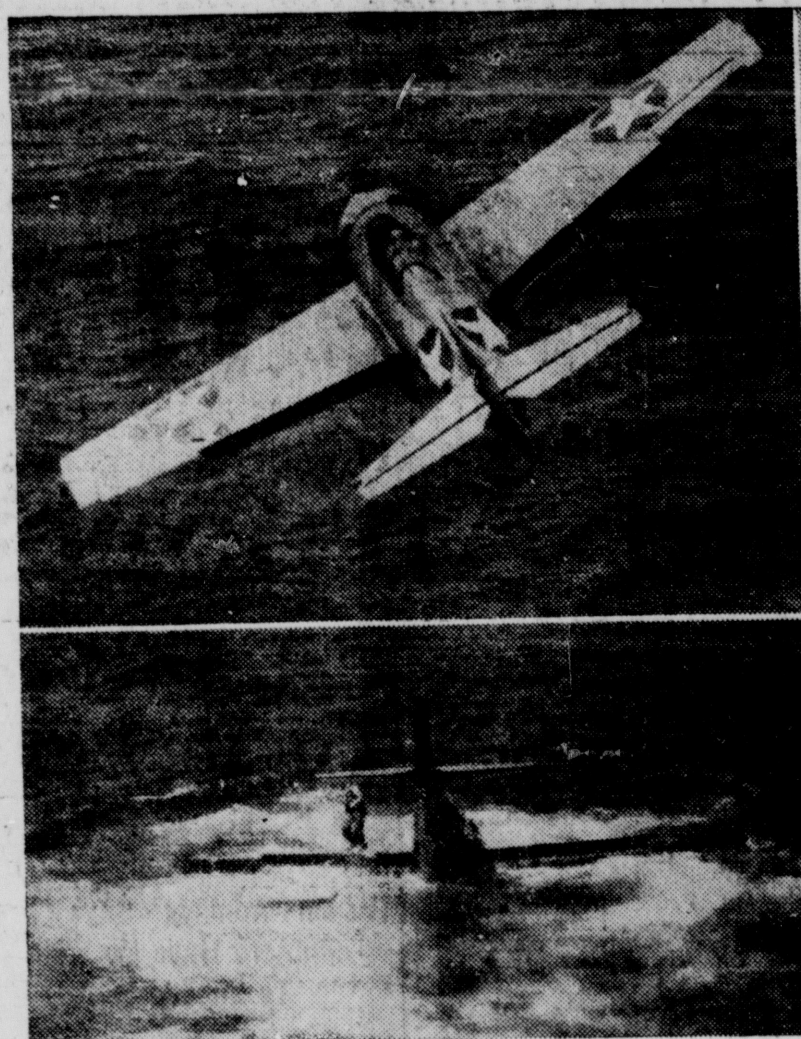

"Just then we passed a garbage can with a discarded doll lying on top. That doll had such a challenging smile that I told Peter 'we ought to do something about this situation and we will.'

"That night, Peter told me he had written a letter to Santa and I might read it if I chose. It said: 'Dear Santa: You needn't visit the children in the southern mountains this Christmas, O'ma (his name for Mrs. Smith) and I will take care of them for you.' Mrs. Smith continued. "Then he had me. I couldn't have backed out of it if I had wanted to."

The craft bobs up almost on an even keel and the pilot can be seen on the wing after releasing his rubber raft (lower left). # NAVY BUILDING PROGRAM HIT BY MARINE OFFICER is an island base—you can't sink it.

Melvin Maas Says Plans Must Be Shifted To Meet New Conditions

"The war has demonstrated the excessive vulnerability of the aircraft carrier. If the carrier is within range of shore-based aircraft, the result is almost always fatal."

The flying boat, too, is "on the way out" in Maas' opinion.

"We should shift the flying boat emphasis to land-based planes," he said. "The Navy needs to develop longer range fighters and bombers. The flying boat, like the carrier, is too vulnerable."

Maas pointed out that the United States now has a "good chain of islands" from which it can use land-based planes which carry greater loads than flying boats.

Aircraft carriers will be needed for convoy escort duty and for carrying fighter planes to island bases, the congressman continued.

"Top-Heavy Program"

"But at present I believe we are building a top-heavy tonnage in carriers. We may have too many carriers and a shortage of cargo ships when we're through."

The latest Navy construction authorization, an $8,000,000,000 bill approving 1,900,000 tons of war shipping, permits changing from carriers to other categories of fighting ships, he emphasized.

Maas said he had discussed the building program "informally" with naval authorities but that his expression or theirs did not represent official views of the Navy department.

As to the outlook for future construction, he said he did not believe there would be need for "any additional major building program."

cording to the British broadcast, which was recorded in New York by monitors of the Office of War Information.

The magazine, which was founded by the Italian dictator himself, is edited by his cousin, Vito Mussolini.

Members of the crew of a Swiss freighter which arrived today in Rio De Janeiro, having sailed from Genoa while a British raid was in progress, declared that the morale of the Italians was at an extremely low ebb because of war weariness and the shortage of food. Peace meetings in Italy were said to be frequent and casualties were reported to be extremely heavy because of lack of adequate air raid shelters.

Turin Blasted Again

Giving the weary Italians no rest, British bombers returned to the stricken city of Turin last night despite bad weather encountered soon after they crossed the English channel. Flying at a height of more than 20,000 feet they unloaded another load of death and destruction on the hapless factory workers of the metropolis that supplies most of northern Italy with its hydro-electric power.

Allied forces in Tunisia held a shorter but stronger line today after withdrawing 20 miles to Medjed-El-Bab and then repulsing a savage twin-pronged Nazi tank assault. The allied line now stretches from a point west of Mateur to the southeast past Medjed-El-Bab in the direction of Pont Du Fahs.

Germans Hurl Back

Allied aircraft, American tanks, British infantry and French artillery cooperated perfectly in smashing back the ambitious German offensive which carried to within 2,000 yards of Medjed-El-Bab before it was hurled back with heavy losses. Bad weather brought about a lull in the fighting after the tank battle ended.

American and Australian ground troops drew the noose tighter around the beleaguered Japanese garrison at Buna on the northeastern coast of New Guinea as allied bomber and fighter planes rained heavy blows on the desperate defenders from the air and big American guns, flown from Australia, pumped shells into their midst.

In Russia, Soviet troops pushed ahead on the Moscow and Stalin-grad fronts despite fierce Nazi counter-attacks, routing the Germans from numerous fortified positions.

Battle Near Rzhnev

The heaviest fighting, according to the Soviet midnight communiqué, took place west of Rzhnev, where the Red army units destroyed 15 enemy strongpoints and 18 blockhouses in a series of bitter battles.

A German infantry unit was annihilated in the northern suburbs of Stalingrad while northwest of the devastated city the Nazis were driven from advanced positions, leaving 300 dead on the battlefield.

An earlier Soviet communiqué told of 60 Nazi transport planes, rushing reinforcements to their tottering fronts, being destroyed on Wednesday.

NAVY BUILDING PROGRAM HIT BY MARINE OFFICER

Melvin Maas Says Plans Must Be Shifted To Meet New Conditions

is an island base—you can't sink it.

"The war has demonstrated the excessive vulnerability of the aircraft carrier. If the carrier is within range of shore-based aircraft, the result is almost always fatal."

The flying boat, too, is "on the way out" in Maas' opinion.

"We should shift the flying boat emphasis to land-based planes," he said. "The Navy needs to develop longer range fighters and bombers. The flying boat, like the carrier, is too vulnerable."

Maas pointed out that the United States now has a "good chain of islands" from which it can use land-based planes which carry greater loads than flying boats.

Aircraft carriers will be needed for convoy escort duty and for carrying fighter planes to island bases, the congressman continued.

"Top-Heavy Program"

"But at present I believe we are building a top-heavy tonnage in carriers. We may have too many carriers and a shortage of cargo ships when we're through."

The latest Navy construction authorization, an $8,000,000 bill approving 1,900,000 tons of war shipping, permits changing from carriers to other categories of fighting ships, he emphasized.

Maas said he had discussed the building program "informally" with naval authorities but that his expression or theirs did not represent official views of the Navy department.

As to the outlook for future construction, he said he did not believe there would be need for "any additional major building program."

cording to the British broadcast, which was recorded in New York by monitors of the Office of War Information.

The magazine, which was founded by the Italian dictator himself, is edited by his cousin, Vito Mussolini.

Members of the crew of a Swiss freighter which arrived today in Rio De Janeiro, having sailed from Genoa while a British raid was in progress, declared that the morale of the Italians was at an extremely low ebb because of war weariness and the shortage of food. Peace meetings in Italy were said to be frequent and casualties were reported to be extremely heavy because of lack of adequate air raid shelters.

Turin Blasted Again

Giving the weary Italians no rest, British bombers returned to the stricken city of Turin last night despite bad weather encountered soon after they crossed the English channel. Flying at a height of more than 20,000 feet they unloaded another load of death and destruction on the hapless factory workers of the metropolis that supplies most of northern Italy with its hydro-electric power.

Allied forces in Tunisia held a shorter but stronger line today after withdrawing 20 miles to Medjed-El-Bab and then repulsing a savage twin-pronged Nazi tank assault. The allied line now stretches from a point west of Mateur to the southeast past Medjed-El-Bab in the direction of Pont Du Fahs.

Germans Hurled Back

Allied aircraft, American tanks, British infantry and French artillery cooperated perfectly in smashing back the ambitious German offensive which carried to within 2,000 yards of Medjed-El-Bab before it was hurled back with heavy losses. Bad weather brought about a lull in the fighting after the tank battle ended.

American and Australian ground troops drew the noose tighter around the beleaguered Japanese garrison at Buna on the northeastern coast of New Guinea as allied bomber and fighter planes rained heavy blows on the desperate defenders from the air and big American guns, flown from Australia, pumped shells into their midst.

In Russia, Soviet troops pushed ahead on the Moscow and Stalingrad fronts despite fierce Nazi counter-attacks, routing the Germans from numerous fortified positions.

Battle Near Rzhev

The heaviest fighting, according to the Soviet midnight communique, took place west of Rzhev, where the Red army units destroyed 15 enemy strongpoints and 18 blockhouses in a series of bitter battles.

A German infantry unit was annihilated in the northern suburbs of Stalingrad while northwest of the devastated city the Nazis were driven from advanced positions, leaving 300 dead on the battlefield.

An earlier Soviet communique told of 60 Nazi transport planes, rushing reinforcements to their tottering fronts, being destroyed on Wednesday.

HIGHLIGHTS ON THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By NEWMAN CAMPBELL

(The International Uniform Lesson on the above topic for Dec. 13 is Matt. 5:13-16; Mark 12:13-17; Luke 6:27-38; Acts 8:4-8; Romans 13:1-10; I Peter 2:13-17, the Golden Text being Matt. 5:13, 14, "Ye are the salt of the earth. . . . Ye are the light of the world.")

YOU KNOW how salt preserves food; how it gives the right taste to food which would taste flat without it. Without salt man and animals would perish. Jesus likened his followers, those early Christians, to salt—the salt of the earth. If, however, they were not good Christians, they were like salt which had lost its saltiness and was good for nothing but to be thrown away.

Also the good Christian is like the city that is set on a hill. Such a city will be seen for miles around. It cannot be hidden.

A lighted candle is not put behind or under something, but in a candlestick to make a light for men to see by. So, said the Master, should Christians be. They should let their light "so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Asks for Coin

Jesus, asked by some Pharisees (trying to trick Him, of course) if they should pay their tax to the Romans, asked for a coin, and taking it in His hand, asked whose image and superscription was on it. "Caesar's," they answered. "Then," said Christ, "render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's."

In other words, you are to be a good citizen and meet your obligations to the constituted authorities which, in this case, were the Romans, but never forget that by your conduct you must render to God the Father what is His. Everything you should do to show your obedience to the civil power except things that are wrong. Men of Christ have died—hundreds and thousands of them—for resisting pressure to do what they knew to be wicked.

Part of Jesus' Sermon on the Mount is included in our lesson today. We have not much room for it, but we will go over it briefly as it is important for us all to be reminded of the qualities which make a person a real follower of Jesus. The world is too full of hatred and revenge for us to easily keep ourselves from being contaminated by it. These words of Jesus should help us.

Told to Love Our Enemies

We are to love our enemies; to do good to those who hate us; to bless them that curse us; to pray for them who despitefully use us; to give liberally to those in need; to be merciful, and to forgive. We are not to judge others harshly, condemning them, or to resist those who insult us. We CAN live so, with the help of the Eternal Goodness, even in these times when passions are so easily aroused because of fear and brutality.

The church has always been considered a spiritual institution, a help in keeping our ideals and in living good lives. Churches do not stop there, however; they are also concerned with the physical welfare of mankind. They found homes for the aged and hospitals for the sick. They feed those who are hungry, clothe many who are naked, and visit the sick. In Christ's time they did the same, as far as they could. Many of our missionaries are trained to give medical attention and care for the sick. The disciples went about, healing the sick and the lame.

Philip, the evangelist, was sent to the city of Samaria, and "preached Christ unto them." The people listened to him and saw the miracles of healing which he did, "and there was great joy in that city."

Being Good Citizen

Summing up the part the church plays in good citizenship and in righteous living, let us quote Peter's words:

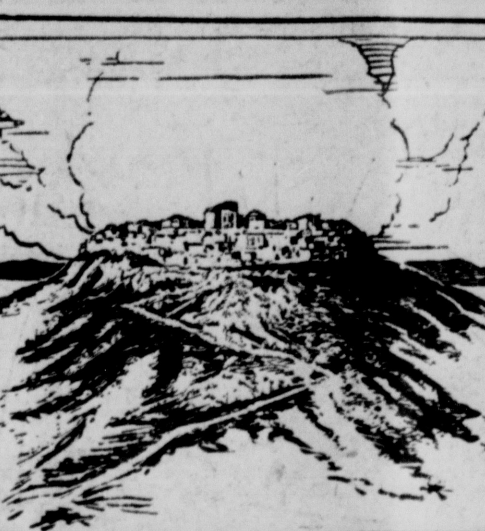

"Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king, as supreme;

"Or unto governors, . . . For so is the will of God, that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men:

"As free, and not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God. Honour all men. Love the brotherhood, Fear God, honour the king."

As we have no king, we should respect and honor our government. It is natural and right that we should especially love those with whom we live and who move in our own circles. But we can also render honor to "all men," and treat them as we would wish to be treated. In the Master's words, "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."

Value of the Church to Social Order

The church is like the city set upon a hill that Jesus spoke of. It cannot be hidden.

Two Anniversaries

By The Rev. Robert T. Kelsey
Presbyterian Church

Two anniversaries mark themselves indelibly on our minds this week. One is the first anniversary of the attack by the Japanese on Pearl Harbor. On December 7, 1941 enemy forces struck from the sky destroying eighteen ships, two hundred planes, and about four thousand men.

On that day people heard from their radios, read in their newspapers, and talked of nothing else but that sneak thrust by certain evil forces. On Fountain Square in Cincinnati multitudes stood reading the electric news sign on the Gibson Hotel corner which announced the stunning damage that had been done. It was a day long to be remembered in the annals of time. Once more evilness had usurped the throne of goodness. Destruction, treachery, and cruelty had been set loose in a world that longed for "peace on earth, good-will to men."

For that is the other anniversary—the nineteen hundred and forty-second anniversary of the birth of the Christ Child. On that date years ago the good forces struck from the sky. They came not to destroy, but to fulfill a prophecy ages old.

There were no radios, newspapers, or electric signs to announce his coming. However, a star in the heavens and an angelic choir announced his arrival to certain wise men and shepherds. And these men became first hand reporters of this wonderful event. Their scoop has been told and retold, its significance preserved in the tradition and custom of many lands. Its permanent value overshadows any temporary thrust at its greatness.

These two anniversaries have provoked much editorial comment. In a publication of last Sunday were to be found these words: "Who can forget the smoke, the terror, the death that struck at dawn on an island in the Pacific? Who can forget the bombs that tore the flag? The treachery of a knife in the back? Who can forget the quiet way in which we went to war, as of one man, dedicated solemnly to erase the brutality of an era?"

The editorial comment of John in one of his letters is interesting by its contrast. "And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life."

The coming of the Babe to Bethlehem is an anniversary that brings confidence, hope, and faith in spite of a memorable terror that may walk stealthily at night.

We cannot help but feel that in the contrast of these two anniversaries we may see a ray of radiance today. The dark anniversary is but temporary in a world where the brightness of Christ's coming has become important. For as Christ lives and reigns in men's hearts permanently, he will soon conquer all temporary forces of ruthlessness, treachery and sin.

For he can inspire a faith that is represented for us in these words that were written by Max Press and published in the New York Herald Tribune.

"Faith, wounded, rises with a cry To cheer the comrades marching by.

Faith stands and holds at bay the pack, Broken, dying it still fights back.

And when all else is lost and done, Faith means the last, remaining gun.

Faith at the stained and riddled wall Steadies the chin of those who fall.

Faith, as the ship is settling fast, Nails the flag to the highest mast.

At the defended hills and banks Faith closes up the broken ranks.

Faith in the bombed and battered street— Bleeds, but bleeds standing on its feet.

Faith it is whose phantom tread Hallows the ground where lie the dead.

Beyond death and the forlorn night— Faith finds life and the lands of light.

That kind of faith will never die. Two anniversaries are brought to mind this week. One has no faith to offer. The other has the faith of God to offer. And that faith conquers.

Farming in Southern Ohio

BY THOMAS BERRY

RAISING HOGS ON CONCRETE

I just learned of a Southern Ohio farmer who raises a lot of hogs, and they are on concrete from the time they are born, until they go over the sales, as finished lard hogs.

The sows are in individual houses and each one has her own lot, and is self fed, with a high percentage of fiber in the ration, to prevent her from getting too fat.

As soon as the pigs are weaned, they are put on concrete and self fed. At one end of the small lot is a wall, with a concrete bottom, and disinfectant to keep down disease, and to prevent the pigs from drinking much of it. They get their water supply from automatic fountains, where they can always find a generous supply of pure, fresh water, that they prefer to that in the wallow, or swimming pool, as someone referred to it.

The feed of the growing porkers is self fed with free choice—the grain in one compartment and the protein and minerals in the others. As they grow older they tend to widen the ration, and yet each individual can, to some extent, eat what it wants. This is a very satisfactory way of feeding.

They get all of the baled alfalfa hay they will clean up, in addition to the balanced ration in the feeders.

The shelter is the first floor of a feed room, that is so constructed that the second story connects with the self feeders by overhead runways to them, so that the feeding can be done from above; and it is not necessary to go in among the hogs to feed them.

While this is a new method of feeding hogs, it is a practical, satisfactory method that has given good results. Parasites and disease germs don't have a chance to get into the herd, unless they are brought in by birds.

Hampshire is the breed used and two litters of pigs are raised a year. It is possible to get three litters with this breed, but not many producers do.

HANDLE AN APPLE LIKE AN EGG

That's some advice from a very successful fruit raiser that I thought about, when I saw Roy Allen, of Hillsboro, wholesale and retail fruit dealer, unloading a truck of apples, by carefully scooping them up with a wire shovel, that didn't cut a one. "You could handle eggs in that way," I thought, as I watched him at work.

I learned that he bought his apples in Megs county and that there is a good crop in this section, and also in adjoining counties, where raising apples is a major enterprise, on many farms.

FROST PROTECTION

You may wonder why the commercial fruit grower usually has a crop, when many of the home orchards don't. One of the big reasons is that the trees in the commercial orchards are stronger, because they have been fertilized, make the buds stronger, too, so that they are more resistant to late freezing weather, responsible for much "June drop" of fruit, as apple raisers refer the loss in June.

I am wondering what substitute the commercial orchard men will use for the nitrate and sulphate fertilizers, applied in early Spring. If it is at all possible, they should be allowed to buy these nitrate carriers, for they are essential if one is to have a profitable crop, year after year.

Farm Machinery

Only 20 percent of the normal supply of new farm machinery will be made by the manufacturers next year, but 150 percent of the parts, according to L. B. Fidler, assistant state supervisor for rural war training courses in Ohio, who is in charge of this work.

The inference is evident; a vocational teacher pointed out. Then he told me that much farm machinery that has been discarded can be made usable, and sometimes at a very small expense. He illustrated this statement by telling about a moving machine that the owner got out of sort with, and traded off. The machinery class put a new clutch in it, at a cost of less than three dollars and it is almost as good as new.

LONG DISTANCE TURKEY

That describes the one at our house that played a major role in the Thanksgiving family dinner. It was still going strong as creamed turkey, three days after the dinner, and there was still meat on the carcass, that will be picked off and probably will find its way into a sandwich mixture.

When I told the dealer from whom I bought the turkey about this he said, "That's because you bought a heavily fleshed, fat bird. You had a young hen and a good one. There is a lot of difference in turkeys."

He is right about this. They are getting smaller and more compact in conformation, to better meet the needs of the small American family.

HIGHLIGHTS ON THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By NEWMAN CAMPBELL

(The International Uniform Lesson on the above topic for Dec. 13 is Matt. 5:13-16; Mark 12:13-17; Luke 6:27-38; Acts 8:4-8; Romans 13:1-10; I Peter 2:13-17, the Golden Text being Matt. 5:13, 14, "Ye are the salt of the earth. . . . Ye are the light of the world.")

YOU KNOW how salt preserves food; how it gives the right taste to food which would taste flat without it. Without salt man and animals would perish. Jesus likened his followers, those early Christians, to salt—the salt of the earth. If, however, they were not good Christians, they were like salt which had lost its saltiness and was good for nothing but to be thrown away.

Also the good Christian is like the city that is set on a hill. Such a city will be seen for miles around. It cannot be hidden.

A lighted candle is not put behind or under something, but in a candlestick to make a light for men to see by. So, said the Master, should Christians be. They should let their light "so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Asks for Coin

Jesus, asked by some Pharisees (trying to trick Him, of course) if they should pay their tax to the Romans, asked for a coin, and taking it in His hand, asked whose image and superscription was on it. "Caesar's," they answered. "Then," said Christ, "render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's."

In other words, you are to be a good citizen and meet your obligations to the constituted authorities which, in this case, were the Romans, but never forget that by your conduct you must render to God the Father what is His. Everything you should do to show your obedience to the civil power except things that are wrong. Men of Christ have died—hundreds and thousands of them—for resisting pressure to do what they knew to be wicked.

Part of Jesus' Sermon on the Mount is included in our lesson today. We have not much room for it, but we will go over it briefly as it is important for us all to be reminded of the qualities which make a person a real follower of Jesus. The world is too full of hatred and revenge for us to easily keep ourselves from being contaminated by it. These words of Jesus should help us.

Told to Love Our Enemies

We are to love our enemies; to do good to those who hate us; to bless them that curse us; to pray for them who despitefully use us; to give liberally to those in need; to be merciful, and to forgive. We are not to judge others harshly, condemning them, or to resist those who insult us. We CAN live so, with the help of the Eternal Goodness, even in these times when passions are so easily roused because of fear and brutality.

The church has always been considered a spiritual institution, a help in keeping our ideals and in living good lives. Churches do not stop there, however; they are also concerned with the physical welfare of mankind. They found homes for the aged and hospitals for the sick. They feed those who are hungry, clothe many who are naked, and visit the sick. In Christ's time they did the same, as far as they could. Many of our missionaries are trained to give medical attention and care for the sick. The disciples went about, healing the sick and the lame.

Philip, the evangelist, was sent to the city of Samaria, and "preached Christ unto them." The people listened to him and saw the miracles of healing which he did, "and there was great joy in that city."

Being Good Citizen

Summing up the part the church plays in good citizenship and in righteous living, let us quote Peter's words:

"Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king, as supreme;

"Or unto governors, . . . For so is the will of God, that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men:

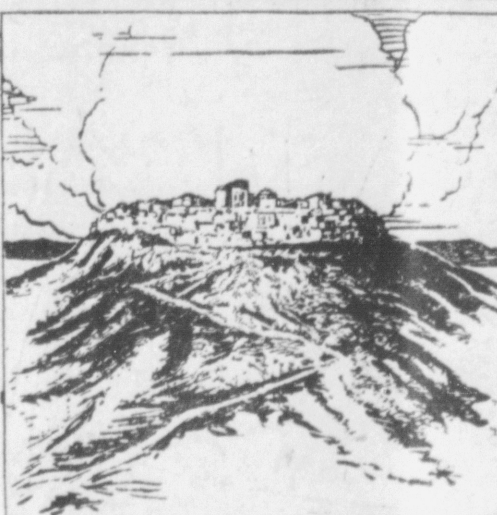

"As free, and not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God.

"Honour all men. Love the brotherhood, Fear God, honour the king."

As we have no king, we should respect and honor our government. It is natural and right that we should especially love those with whom we live and who move in our own circles. But we can also render honor to "all men" and treat them as we would wish to be treated. In the Master's words, "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."

Two Anniversaries

By The Rev. Robert T. Kelsey Presbyterian Church

Two anniversaries mark themselves indelibly on our minds this week. One is the first anniversary of the attack by the Japanese on Pearl Harbor. On December 7, 1941 enemy forces struck from the sky, destroying eighteen ships, two hundred planes, and about four thousand men.

On that day people heard from their radios, read in their newspapers, and talked of nothing else but that sneak thrust by certain evil forces. On Fountain Square in Cincinnati multitudes stood reading the electric news sign on the Gibson Hotel corner which announced the stunning damage that had been done. It was a day long to be remembered in the annals of time. Once more evilness had usurped the throne of goodness. Destruction, treachery, and cruelty had been set loose in a world that longed for "peace on earth, good-will to men."

For that is the other anniversary—the nineteen hundred and forty-second anniversary of the birth of the Christ Child. On that date years ago the good forces struck from the sky. They came not to destroy, but to fulfill a prophecy ages old.

There were no radios, newspapers, or electric signs to announce his coming. However, a star in the heavens and an angelic choir announced his arrival to certain wise men and shepherds. And these men became first hand reporters of this wonderful event. Their scoop has been told and retold, its significance preserved in the tradition and custom of many lands. Its permanent value overshadows any temporary thrust at its greatness.

These two anniversaries have provoked much editorial comment. In a publication of last Sunday were to be found these words: "Who can forget the smoke, the terror, the death that struck at dawn on an island in the Pacific? Who can forget the bombs that tore the flag? The treachery of a knife in the back? Who can forget the quiet war in which we went to war, as of one man, dedicated solemnly to erase the brutality of an era?"

The editorial comment of John in one of his letters is interesting by its contrast. "And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life."

The coming of the Babe to Bethlehem is an anniversary that brings confidence, hope, and faith in spite of a memorable terror that we walk stealthily at night.

We cannot help but feel that in the contrast of these two anniversaries we may see a ray of radiance this day. The dark anniversary is but temporary in a world where the brightness of Christ's coming has become important. For as Christ lives and reigns in men's hearts permanently, he will soon conquer all temporary forces of ruthlessness, treachery and sin.

For he can inspire a faith that is represented for us in these words that were written by Max Press and published in the New York Herald Tribune.

"Faith, wounded, rises with a cry To cheer the comrades marching by.

Faith stands and holds at bay the pack, Broken, dying it still fights back.

And when all else is lost and done, Faith mans the last, remaining gun.

Faith at the stained and riddled wall Steadies the chin of those who fall.

Faith, as the ship is settling fast, Nails the flag to the highest mast.

At the defended hills and banks Faith closes up the broken ranks.

Faith in the bombed and battered street— Bleeds, but bleeds standing on its feet.

Faith it is whose phantom tread Hallows the ground where lie the dead.

Beyond death and the forlorn night— Faith finds life and the lands of light.

That kind of faith will never die. Two anniversaries are brought to mind this week. One has no faith to offer. The other has the faith of God to offer. And that faith conquers.

Farming in Southern Ohio

BY THOMAS BERRY

RAISING HOGS ON CONCRETE

I just learned of a Southern Ohio farmer who raises a lot of hogs, and they are on concrete from the time they are born, until they go over the sales, as finished lard hogs.

The sows are in individual houses and each one has her own lot, and is self fed, with a high percentage of fiber in the ration, to prevent her from getting too fat.

As soon as the pigs are weaned, they are put on concrete and self fed. At one end of the small lot is a wallow, with a concrete bottom, and disinfectant to keep down disease, and to prevent the pigs from drinking much of it. They get their water supply from automatic fountains, where they can always find a generous supply of pure, fresh water, that they prefer to that in the wallow, or swimming pool, as someone referred to it.

The feed of the growing porkers is self fed with free choice—the grain in one compartment and the protein and minerals in the others. As they grow older they tend to widen the ration, and yet each individual can, to some extent, eat what it wants. This is a very satisfactory way of feeding.

They get all of the baled alfalfa hay they will clean up, in addition to the balanced ration in the feeders.

The shelter is the first floor of a feed room, that is so constructed that the second story connects with the self feeders by overhead runways to them, so that the feeding can be done from above; and it is not necessary to go in among the hogs to feed them.

While this is a new method of feeding hogs, it is a practical, satisfactory method that has given good results. Parasites and disease germs don't have a chance to get into the herd, unless they are brought in by birds.

Hampshire is the breed used and two litters of pigs are raised a year. It is possible to get three litters with this breed, but not many producers do.

THIN CHICKENS

"I have bought a lot of poultry this year and the turkeys are fat, but the chickens are not, and it doesn't pay us to feed them." That is what a southern Ohio poultry dealer just told me. He does a big business and speaks with authority.

"Why are the chickens thin and the turkeys fat as you explained, when I bought one for Thanksgiving?" I asked.

"I don't know," he said, "do you?"

I don't; but I am wondering if the succulent grass on which most of the chickens graze, hasn't had something to do with it. We have had a lot of rain this year and especially in the fall, when chickens were being finished for the Fall market. Can any of our readers answer this question for us?

LONG DISTANCE TURKEY

That describes the one at our house that played a major role in the Thanksgiving family dinner. It was still going strong as creamed turkey, three days after the dinner, and there was still meat on the carcass, that will be picked off and probably will find its way into a sandwich mixture.

When I told the dealer from whom I bought the turkey about this he said, "That's because you bought a heavily fleshed, fat bird. You had a young hen and a good one. There is a lot of difference in turkeys."

He is right about this. They are getting smaller and more compact in conformation, to better meet the needs of the small American family.

Broad breasted turkeys are raised in a big way now, too, for they are heavily fleshed on the part of the carcass that is well liked by many people, the breast.

CALIFORNIA TURKEY

A card from relatives in California reminds us that turkey is very popular out there and that turkey played the major role in the family Thanksgiving dinner. You see many large turkey ranches in California. I remember passing one that had thousands of turkeys on range. I learned that the dry climate during the growing season in the central part of the state, eliminates much of the parasite hazard, with which we must contend in the East, especially if we have a wet season.

HANDLE AN APPLE LIKE AN EGG

That's some advice from a very successful fruit raiser that I thought about, when I saw Roy Allen, of Hillsboro, wholesale and retail fruit dealer, unloading a truck of apples, by carefully scooping them up with a wire shovel, that didn't cut a one. "You could handle eggs in that way," I thought, as I watched him at work.

I learned that he bought his apples in Megs county and that there is a good crop in this section, and also in adjoining counties, where raising apples is a major enterprise, on many farms.

FROST PROTECTION

You may wonder why the commercial fruit grower usually has a crop, when many of the home orchards don't. One of the big reasons is that the trees in the commercial orchards are stronger, because they have been fertilized, make the buds stronger, too, so that they are more resistant to late freezing weather, responsible for much "June drop" of fruit, as apple raisers refer the loss in June.

I am wondering what substitute the commercial orchard men will use for the nitrate and sulphate fertilizers, applied in early Spring. If it is at all possible, they should be allowed to buy these nitrate carriers, for they are essential if one is to have a profitable crop, year after year.

Farm Machinery

Only 20 percent of the normal supply of new farm machinery will be made by the manufacturers next year, but 150 percent of the parts, according to L. B. Fiddler, assistant state supervisor for rural training courses in Ohio, who is in charge of this work.

The inference is evident; a vocational teacher pointed out. Then he told me that much farm machinery that has been discarded can be made usable, and sometimes at a very small expense. He illustrated this statement by telling about a mowing machine that the owner got out of sort with, and traded off. The machinery class put a new clutch in it, at a cost of less than three dollars and it is almost as good as new.

STEPPING STONES
BEFORE the war, it is safe to say, only Americans of Italian origin may have heard of Pantelleria. This little island, only 45 miles square, lies almost halfway between Sicily and Africa. Fortified as it has been under Mussolini, it is a thorn in the side of Mediterranean traffic and a great aid in shipping Axis supplies to Africa. An almost certain clause in the final peace treaty will be the destruction of the fortifications of Pantelleria, and some mode of assurance that they are not rebuilt.
The parallel with Heligoland is striking. This island off the German coast near the mouths of the Elbe and Weser rivers, is smaller than Pantelleria. Once Danish, it was British from 1807 to 1890, when the British foolishly exchanged it for the supposedly more valuable African colony of Zanzibar. In the last war it was a bulwark for the German navy, especially the submarines, and a tower of defense to the German coast. The peace treaty of 1919 saw to it that the fortifications were demolished; by now they have probably been restored.
Modern warfare has given new values to formerly unconsidered spots, such as these two islands.

STARTLING THE JAPS
AN AMERICAN submarine recently rose in a Japanese harbor and torpedoed boats lying there, in full view of the people on shore. This must have been as startling, not to say horrifying, as if a cobra had appeared in their living rooms. The Japanese government has been feeding its subjects stories about one crushing victory after another, and now these Americans bring war to Japan's very doorstep.
Such happenings cannot be explained away. Too many people know about them. This country had a like experience in 1918, when American war vessels engaged a German submarine off the coast of Cape Cod, with thousands watching on the land. People took it calmly as an isolated incident. If our cities had been bombed, like Tokyo by General Doolittle, that might well have had a different effect. Our nerves were good. Will Japan's be as strong?
If things keep on going as they have lately, we may find ourselves singing the sad refrain:
"Oh don't the days seem lank and long,
When all goes right and nothing goes wrong!
And isn't life extremely flat
With nothing whatever to grumble at!"

WORLD AT A GLANCE . . . . . —By— Charles P. Stewart
WASHINGTON—United Nations Statesmanship is not making the big mistake today that the Allies' leaders made during and for quite a while following the last war. That mistake lay in the assumption that licking the then enemy permanently ended outlaw rulers' attempts at world anarchy and slaughter. Past history ought to have taught students that a war can be fought in a succession of chapters, with pretty long pauses between 'em, like the celebrated 30-year conflict in Europe. The trouble with that incident was that it occurred so long ago (away back in the Middle Ages) that it had been forgotten, for practical current consideration by our generation's strategists.
Nineteen eighteen isn't so remote but that it's recalled at present. Kaiser Wilhelm having been squeezed, it was taken for granted that Germany was further danger. Japan, in that era, wasn't an accidental consideration. Italy's civilized yet, but for Benito Mussolini.
Accordingly, the Germans having capitulated, the 1918 supposition was that mundane relationships had regulated themselves, to STAY so.

Now it's recognized that things have got to be policed indefinitely.
How to do it, though, is a good bit of a puzzle.
Limited Co-operation
The proposition would be simple enough, if all peoples would co-operate, but how's a country like Germany to be trusted to do its honest, disinterested share of policing? And yet, what IS going to be done with it? It can't be exterminated. Even Japan can't be. As to Italy, putting Duce Mussolini in a bughouse will be insufficient.
Okay! What's the program?
It doesn't seem practical to incorporate the democracies' military forces into an international lineup, inclusive of all the rest of 'em.
The Italians'll remain respectable and law-abiding. That's agreed.
The Japs, while their existing military class survives, unquestionably will have to be policed everlastingly, similarly to any other gang of thugs and assassins.
What, then, can be promised to ward capable world-policing, from this war's end on into another 1,000,000 years or so?
Germany isn't to be relied on, for as much as a couple or three decades.
Italy, however good its intentions, is insufficient.
The Japs (with a nice population personality) are run by a government it's impossible to deal with.
Having licked these folk, how KEEP 'em so?
The subject was much discussed at the recent convention of the Na-

The WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND
By DREW PEARSON
BUREAUCRATS TOSS BUCK
WASHINGTON — If there ever was a governmental case of the old lady who couldn't get her pig over the sty, it is the sad, inside story of the run-around given the building of barges to carry oil to the Atlantic seaboard.
While New England states have been warned that people may freeze, the buck-passing game over oil barges has continued. Each government department has a different excuse. The War Production Board says its job is merely to pass on critical materials for the barges. The Office of Defense Transportation says its job only to certify the need for barges. Jesse Jones' RFC says its job is only to finance the barges. The Office of Petroleum Coordinator says its job is to determine the amounts of oil needed. And so on.
No one has supplied the stick to beat the dog, to bite the pig, and thus get the pig over the sty so the Atlantic seaboard will get oil this Winter.
As early as last Spring, Senators Pepper of Florida, Brewster of Maine plus other Congressional leaders began to put the heat on these agencies. Pepper called a meeting of the Maritime Commission, Defense Plant Corp., WPB, ODT, Inland Barge Corp., and various others. The plan was to bring oil laden barges from Texas by canal to Florida, then across Florida by rail, then up the coastal waterway to Trenton, N. J.
For years Congress has been appropriating money to dig and keep up the inter-coastal waterways. Millions have been spent on them. They extend all the way from Corpus Christi to New Jersey. For years they were considered mere pork barrel ventures. But now Senators argue that finally the time has come when they can be put to vital use.

NO DIESEL ENGINES
The first snag, however, was lack of steel to build barges. Then it was proposed to build wooden barges, which can carry heavy oil without much leakage. So a plan for 500 wooden barges was worked out and submitted to the WPB in July — but another obstacle developed.
This was Diesel engines. There were not enough for the Army's or Navy's landing boats, let alone for civilian use.
At this point Florida auto dealers proposed powering the barges with large outboard motors already manufactured. Chrysler said it had the motors available and Senator Pepper put it up to the ODT, the OPC and Inland Waterways, but they wouldn't even send representatives to Detroit for a test.
However, Col. Harry B. Vaughn, District Army Engineer in Philadelphia, had seen the motors tested and recommended them. But weeks dragged by and nothing happened. One excuse was that the outboard motors, when placed on barges, were not protected from the weather, and that the crew also lacked protection.
Finally, however, three motors are being placed on a wooden barge, with a small house built over them, and it is barely possible that with prayers and Congressional push a few of these barges may begin reaches its peak in February. It is difficult to suppose that weather conditions and exposure do not have something to do with the prevalence of colds. This suggests also common-sense methods as to prevention of colds in not allowing the body to remain either wet or cold after coming in after a storm.

The question of vaccinations has been brought up a good many times and I hear a great many opposing opinions as to the efficacy of vaccinations. Just recently there are available cold toxoid vaccines which can be taken by mouth. I see no objection to anybody's trying this method of prevention with or without a doctor's supervision and I hope that we may have some statistics and reports on the value of this treatment during the present winter.
Experiments with Vaccines
Vaccinations have previously been given hypodermically and, of course, hypodermic vaccines are still available and it is generally recognized that vaccines, in order to be efficacious, should enter directly into the blood stream and not go through the digestive system. The best advice we have about vaccines up to the present time is that they have done no good whatever, according to carefully controlled experiments. But if anyone still wants to take a chance on them and has the price, there is no law to prevent him from taking hypodermic vaccines for the common cold, starting right now.

SYNOPSIS
A chance meeting in the San Francisco fog leads to a spur-of-the-moment marriage in Reno by PAIGE SHELTON, whose sweetheart has just been killed fighting for the Allies, and RESTWICK (RUSTY) CARNES III, wealthy descendant of early Hawaiian settlers. Rusty marries her to spite the girl he thinks he loves. EUGENIA NORTH, his selfish fiancée.
YESTERDAY: On the night of the captain's dinner, Rusty and Paige try hard to make Eugenia more jealous.
CHAPTER FOURTEEN
PAIGE STILL was angry the following morning. Because it was the last morning on shipboard she arose early and went out on the promenade deck to watch their entrance into Honolulu. She was glad that Rusty still was sleeping when she left the stateroom; she did not even want to say good morning to him.
The previous evening had been particularly offensive to her. First Rusty had fussed because his lost love was not noticing his campaign to make her unhappy.
"Since she traded seats in the dining room with that radio officer all I can see of her is her spinal column, and she can't see our table at all."
"Which is exactly why she traded places," Paige had said crisply.
The beam on his face had been like that on a child who asks for a dime and gets a quarter. "Sure, That's right. She couldn't take it."
Again that feeling of wanting to slap him had swept through her and brought her up with an ashamed jolt. ### STEPPING STONES

BEFORE the war, it is safe to say, only Americans of Italian origin may have heard of Pantelleria. This little island, only 45 miles square, lies almost halfway between Sicily and Africa. Fortified as it has been under Mussolini, it is a thorn in the side of Mediterranean traffic and a great aid in shipping Axis supplies to Africa. An almost certain clause in the final peace treaty will be the destruction of the fortifications of Pantelleria, and some mode of assurance that they are not rebuilt.

The parallel with Heligoland is striking. This island off the German coast near the mouths of the Elbe and Weser rivers, is smaller than Pantelleria. Once Danish, it was British from 1807 to 1890, when the British foolishly exchanged it for the supposedly more valuable African colony of Zanzibar. In the last war it was a bulwark for the German navy, especially the submarines, and a tower of defense to the German coast. The peace treaty of 1919 saw to it that the fortifications were demolished; by now they have probably been restored.

Modern warfare has given new values to formerly unconsidered spots, such as these two islands.

STARTLING THE JAPS

AN AMERICAN submarine recently rose in a Japanese harbor and torpedoed boats lying there, in full view of the people on shore. This must have been as startling, not to say horrifying, as if a cobra had appeared in their living rooms. The Japanese government has been feeding its subjects stories about one crushing victory after another, and now these Americans bring war to Japan's very doorstep.

Such happenings cannot be explained away. Too many people know about them. This country had a like experience in 1918, when American war vessels engaged a German submarine off the coast of Cape Cod, with thousands watching on the land. People took it calmly as an isolated incident. If our cities had been bombed, like Tokyo by General Doolittle, that might well have had a different effect. Our nerves were good. Will Japan's be as strong?

If things keep on going as they have lately, we may find ourselves singing the sad refrain:
"Oh don't the days seem lank and long,
When all goes right and nothing goes wrong!
And isn't life extremely flat
With nothing whatever to grumble at!"

WORLD AT A GLANCE . . . . .

—By—
Charles P. Stewart

WASHINGTON—United Nations Statesmanship is not making the big mistake today that the Allies' leaders made during and for quite a while following the last war.

That mistake lay in the assumption that licking the then enemy permanently ended outlaw rulers' attempts at world sand-bagging and slaughter. Past history ought to have taught students that a war can be fought in a succession of chapters with pretty long pauses between 'em, like the celebrated 20-year conflict in Europe. The trouble with that incident was that it occurred so long ago (away back in the Middle Ages) that it had been forgotten, for practical current consideration by our generation's strategists.

Nineteen eighteen isn't so remote but that it's recalled at present. Kaiser Wilhelm having been squelched, it was taken for granted that Germany was no further danger. Japan, in that era, wasn't an Occidental consideration. Italy's civilized yet, but for Benito Mussolini.

Accordingly, the Germans having capitulated, the 1918 supposition was that mundane relationships had regulated themselves, to STAY so

Now it's recognized that things have got to be policed indefinitely. How to do it, though, is a good bit of a puzzle.

Limited Co-operation

The proposition would be simple enough, if all peoples would co-operate, but how's a country like Germany to be trusted to do its honest, disinterested share of policing? And yet, what is going to be done with it? It can't be exterminated. Even Japan can't be. As to Italy, putting Duce Mussolini in a bughouse will be insufficient.

Okay! What's the program? It doesn't seem practical to incorporate the democracies' military forces into an international lineup, inclusive of all the rest of 'em.

The Italians'll remain respectable and law-abiding. That's agreed. The Japs, while their existing military class survives, unquestionably will have to be policed everlastingly, similarly to any other gang of thugs and assassins. What, then, can be promised toward capable world-policing, from this war's end on into another 1,000,000 years or so?

Germany isn't to be relied on, for as much as a couple or three decades.

Italy, however good its intentions, is inefficient.

The Japs (with a nice population personally) are run by a government it's impossible to deal with.

Having licked these folk, how KEEP 'em so?

The subject was much discussed at recent convention of the Na-

BUREAUCRATS TOSS BUCK

WASHINGTON—If there ever was a governmental case of the old lady who couldn't get her pig over the sty, it is the sad, inside story of the run-around given the building of barges to carry oil to the Atlantic seaboard.

While New England states have been warned that people may freeze, the buck-passing game over oil barges has continued. Each government department has a different excuse. The War Production Board says its job is merely to pass on critical materials for the barges. The Office of Defense Transportation says its job only to certify the need for barges. Jesse Jones' RFC says its job is only to finance the barges. The Office of Petroleum Coordinator says its job is to determine the amounts of oil needed. And so on.

No one has supplied the stick to beat the dog, to bite the pig, and thus get the pig over the sty so the Atlantic seaboard will get oil this Winter.

As early as last Spring, Senators Pepper of Florida, Brewster of Maine plus other Congressional leaders began to put the heat on these agencies. Pepper called a meeting of the Maritime Commission, Defense Plant Corp., WPB, ODT, Inland Barge Corp., and various others. The plan was to bring oil laden barges from Texas by canal to Florida, then across Florida by rail, then up the coastal waterway to Trenton, N. J.

For years Congress has been appropriating money to dig and keep up the inter-coastal waterways. Millions have been spent on them. They extend all the way from Corpus Christi to New Jersey. For years they were considered mere pork barrel ventures. But now Senators argue that finally the time has come when they can be put to vital use.

NO DIESEL ENGINES

The first snag, however, was lack of steel to build barges. Then it was proposed to build wooden barges, which can carry heavy oil without much leakage. So a plan for 500 wooden barges was worked out and submitted to the WPB in July—but another obstacle developed.

This was Diesel engines. There were not enough for the Army's or Navy's landing boats, let alone for civilian use.

At this point Florida auto dealers proposed powering the barges with large outboard motors already manufactured. Chrysler said it had the motors available and Senator Pepper put it up to the ODT, the OPC and Inland Waterways, but they wouldn't even send representatives to Detroit for a test.

However, Col. Harry B. Vaughn, District Army Engineer in Philadelphia, had seen the motors tested and recommended them. But weeks dragged by and nothing happened. One excuse was that the outboard motors, when placed on barges, were not protected from the weather, and that the crew also lacked protection.

Finally, however, three motors are being placed on a wooden barge, with a small house built over them, and it is barely possible that with prayers and Congressional push a few of these barges may begin

Common Colds Due to Many Causes and Few Are Immune

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

the statement, "Avoid Colds." I am perfectly willing to do this if somebody will just be kind enough to tell exactly what I must do to avoid them.

A number of factors enter into the production of the common cold. One, of course, is the presence of germs. In a common cold it is probable that the first infection is by one germ which is in the form of a virus and later on a number of other germs get implanted in the nose, throat and bronchial tubes, causing a secondary infection with some of the disagreeable symptoms of the later stages of the cold.

Undoubtedly crowding and congregations of people spread colds. It is an ordinary observation that in a given school room, office or industrial plant one cold will start and within a week 50 to 75 per cent of the pupils in the school room, the workers in the office or the industrial plant will come down with a cold. Contamination is undoubtedly the principle factor in producing colds.

Some Immunity
At the same time immunity plays a part, for in all school rooms, offices and industrial plants, about 25 per cent of the people exposed do not catch a cold. A barrel of seeds that are kept in a store will not sprout because they are not in the right soil; the same thing happens with germs; they will not grow unless they are in the right soil.

Another factor undoubtedly is temperature and weather. In North America colds become almost non-existent in August. The season for colds gets a good start about the middle of December and reaches its peak in February. It is difficult to suppose that weather conditions and exposure do not have something to do with the prevalence of colds. This suggests also common-sense methods as to prevention of colds in not allowing the body to remain either wet or cold after coming in after a storm.

BY LORENA CARLETON
WRITTEN FOR AND RELEASED BY CENTRAL PRESS ASSOCIATION

SYNOPSIS

A chance meeting in the San Francisco fog leads to a spur-of-the-moment marriage in Reno by PAIGE SHELTON, whose sweetheart has just been killed fighting for the Allies, and RESTWICK (RUSTY) CARNES III, wealthy descendant of early Hawaiian settlers. Rusty marries her to spite the girl he thinks he loves, EUGENIA NORTH, his selfish fiancée.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

PAIGE STILL was angry the following morning. Because it was the last morning on shipboard she arose early and went out on the promenade deck to watch their entrance into Honolulu. She was glad that Rusty still was sleeping when she left the stateroom; she did not even want to say good morning to him.

The previous evening had been particularly offensive to her. First Rusty had fussed because his love was not noticing his campaign to make her unhappy.

"Since she traded seats in the dining room with that radio officer all I can see of her is her spinal column. And she can't see our table at all."

"Which is exactly why she traded places," Paige had said crisply. The beam on his face had been like that on a child who asks for a dime and gets a quarter. "Sure. That's right. She couldn't take it."

Again that feeling of wanting to slap him had swept through her and brought her up with an ashamed jolt. She had been hard put to quiet herself, to make herself stop frowning angrily in a dress that required stateliness. But why did he have to be so ecstatic over Eugenia's jealousy? And why had he had to drag her, along with others, to their table in the dance salon? As if it weren't bad enough to be constantly aware of her, Paige thought murderously. She had been forced to be outwardly civil, at any rate, as they sat at one table.

The memory made Paige's shoulders shake with repulsion. She looked hard across the water, willing herself to ignore the preceding night.

A misty rain was falling, changing the island of Oahu from its usual ruggedness to a less attractive and rather fierce gray-green. After a while, houses along the beach were visible through the rainfall, lavish places, cradled by the Pacific. Diamond Head began to take on character, instead of appearing just a drab mountain and gradual Waikiki Beach was before them across the rain-blurred water, with its two famous hotels, the dusty-pink Royal Hawaiian and the less impressive Moana.

Apparently there was no rain falling there because Paige could see a few early morning bathers on the narrow coral Waikiki beach, and a few surfboard riders. Up ahead of the ship, heads bobbing atop the water, were the diving boys waiting to swim out for coins.

As the vessel gently swished on toward Aloha Tower there suddenly was no rain. It was as if there never had been rain, except that two rainbows flooded the skies with their prismatic colors and everything became bright-white with tropical sunshine.

Just as the Mazatlan was nosing into place Rusty came on deck and elbowed into a place beside Paige. "Boy, I have the hanger of hangers."

His wife did not answer for a moment. She was watching the white-clad native singers, directly opposite the promenade deck, in a sheltered place on the upper pier. They moved into position before the orchestra and began to welcome the ship with "Song of the Islands," sung in the Hawaiian language. Everyone was contentedly silent, listening to the young girl with the beautiful teeth, the older woman with the amazingly young voice, the golden voiced male singers.

The harmony was so close, so sweet, that Paige worried inwardly, fearing she might burst into tears. Aloud she said, "I should think you'd be very happy this morning after having been at the same table with your precious Eugenia last night." She mocked, "Just one big, happy family, that's what we were."

Quickly she moved her gaze from Rusty's and again looked toward the pier. Swarms of people were meeting the boat: Army and Navy men in uniforms; islanders, brown men, the sun, in tropical clothes and straw hats; a few tourists welcoming more tourists; various foreigners, typical of the island's colorful population: Filipinos, Chinese, Japanese, Hawaiians, Portuguese—both grownups and children meeting no one in particular, just there to participate in the excitement. Almost everyone carried leis of red or pink carnations, of pale yellow ginger blossoms, of pikake that looks insignificant until one learns its value and romantic legend, of floodingly fragrant tuberose, and a great many even more expensive ones of scarlet feathers.

Restwick Carnes lit a cigarette with nervous fingers, result of the previous night's dissipation. "I'll admit the big happy family business where you and the captain and the chief officer were concerned."

"They were not romantic. They were apologetic, and rightly so. That wasn't what surprised me. Do you know what surprised me?" she said into the red-haired man's questioning face. "Eugenia's being so friendly with the Brazilians and their wives."

Rusty said, "It didn't surprise me. Eugenia's being with the Brazilians. Everyone loves Eugenia," he praised with smugness.

Paige's nose crinkled, but she let the statement pass. "They seem to be such close friends," she said. "I was just wondering how long they've been acquainted. Do you know?"

"They met in the hotel in San Francisco less than a week ago. Someone introduced them. Hostess or someone. I don't know. I didn't hang around them a lot. They chatter too much to suit me." He dismissed the whole affair by repeating, "It's just as I said. Everyone loves Eugenia. Instantly."

"Not everyone!"

"Oh well," he shrugged, "not those jealous of her, naturally."

"Jealous?" Paige popped back. "You make me sick." She leaned over the railing and stared down at the wharf activity.

"Let's not brawl publicly, dear. Most unbecoming to newlyweds," Rusty mocked.

The girl clamped her amethyst-tinted lips, then opened them to ask, "Why this delay in landing? The ropes are all tied. Why don't they roll the gangplanks over and let us off?"

"Jewel thieves."

Paige's gray eyes narrowed beneath a sudden frown. "Of course." Instinctively her arm tightened over the gray suede purse.

The singers were now finishing "To You Sweetheart, Aloha." Restwick Carnes said, "No matter how often I come home, I never tire of this demonstrative greeting." His face brightened as they began a native number which Paige could not understand. Rusty, however, was grinning widely. "Comedy number," he said unnecessarily.

Paige watched him with a sideways, surreptitious gaze. He is the true islander, she mused, studying his eyes, crinkled from years of tropical sun; his hair, deep red in some spots, sunburned lighter in others; his skin that would be perpetually burnished. He was tall and very lean, yet powerful looking and broad-shouldered from swimming and other island sports. He would wear a lei with grace, Paige knew, as it meant to be worn, making it an accompaniment to his attractiveness. Instead of a floral horse collar for a blushing, embarrassed fellow. In short, decided the girl, he was perfect. Yes, perfect. Detestably so in a linen suit and a sport shirt of Chinese silk.

During the long wait to get off the ship, which was unusual, people began to be restless. They had called greetings until that held no further interest. The crowds on the pier, eager to cast flower necklaces on the visitors, grew impatient enough to attempt throwing their offerings.

On the deck, young military wives, some holding babies, were now finding this forced wait more interminable than the weeks of loneliness they had endured on the mainland. The orchestra and singers, mildly disconcerted, drifted away. Paige began to fret because she was wearing her gray suit. It looked so heavy and hot compared with Rusty's tropical clothes. I should have changed, she said to herself, but I simply was too tired.

The night before had seemed endless. Dancing in the salon, champagne in the captain's suite, more champagne later with "dear" Eugenia and the Brazilians in their cabin. From the captain, apologies stacked on top of apologies. From Eugenia, tight little smiles. Maple syrup on top of concentrated venom. From the Brazilians, ejaculated despair that somehow lost importance because they were so gay and exclamationary.

"Holy cow!" shouted Rusty and then, "Hello, darling!" Paige turned quickly. He was pointing with one hand for her benefit and waving frantically with the other for the benefit of an entirely different woman. A little gnome of a woman seemingly alive with leis.

"Abby," Paige said to herself with certainty and thought, "I feel as if I'd known her all my life." She smiled. And then she stopped smiling, for the stout little woman was not smiling.

She was standing in a veritable paralysis. Then, still staring, she began to gnaw abstractedly on a fingernail. Finally she smiled also. Briefly, she disappeared and soon was seen again, wedging her way into a position directly across from Paige and Rusty, elbowing unenthusiastic people aside.

She pointed to Paige and called out, "Rusty, where did you get that?"

SCHOOL LIBRARY RECEIVES BOOKS ON MANY TOPICS

"Anything Can Happen on the Rivers" by Carol Ryrle Brink, "Cross Creek" by Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings, "The Captain from Connecticut" by C. S. Forester, Addison Burbank's "The Cedar Deer" and "Trans-Atlantic Pilot" by Frederic Nelson Litten are just a few books among the many just received at the high school library.

Boys and girls alike will enjoy "Anything Can Happen on the Rivers", an eventful travel story set on the romantic Seine, giving a vivid picture of a part of France beloved by all travelers.

"Cross Creek" by the author of "The Yearling" has brilliant and fascinating descriptions of the Florida scenery—the orange groves, the swamps, the scattered homesteads—and of the animals and reptiles of the region which has been the author's home for almost a dozen years.

"The Captain from Connecticut" has the color of tropic lands, romance, high courage and high reading excitement in Mr. Forester's fine tale of a stalwart American. The time of the story is the 1812 war period.

Not only children, but adults, will find "Cedar Deer" entertaining and educational. This is the tale of a sturdy Maya boy who is virtually a slave on a coffee plantation in Guatemala.

"Trans-Atlantic Pilot", mainly for older boys, tells the very exciting story of Pilot Johnny Caruther's aviation problems.

GIRLS WILL JOIN OTHER HS CLUBS IN GIVING PARTY

Senior Girl Reserves discussed fully the annual Christmas party at their meeting Thursday. The girls voted to join the other high school clubs in giving this affair for the benefit of children chosen from the lower grades.

President Julia Jane Work appointed Elizabeth Downing to represent the club on the joint committee.

Treasurer Patty Owens announced that the club owed five dollars on its Community Chest pledge. This leaves a balance of ten dollars which will be paid later.

Elizabeth Downing urged the girls to bring in sales tax stamps, as this is the main source of the club's income.

The meeting was then turned over to Ruth Melvin, who passed out song sheets. The songs were ended by singing "Follow the Glean."

The president resumed her position as she reminded the girls to bring in excuses for their absences at church or at regular meetings. These should be presented preceding the following meeting.

HOME DEFENSE; SPEAKERS TOPIC

Thursday, the first period, Principal J. Wray Heny spoke to the high school pupils on the "Office of Civilian Defense." In this talk he gave the pupils further instructions and information.

There are five regional centers in the state of Ohio; Circleville's control center is Columbus.

He explained the reasons why Circleville might be bombed by the enemy. Some of these are the Scioto river bridge, canning factories, feed mills, paper plant and other industries in Circleville.

EDITORIAL

CHRISTMAS IN WAR TIME

War will change many Christmas plans this year. The army, navy, and marines have called millions of men and women from their homes. Transportation difficulties prevent the absent ones from coming home. Gasoline rationing will also interfere with traditional treks to the city to shop and to take Junior to see Santa Claus.

There will no doubt be changes in gifts this year. Some people are shocked at the thought of exchanging presents, but really it is so shocking? Don't you feel the boys want us to carry on as before?

Most of us feel that we should try to have as normal a Christmas as is possible under existing conditions. Many family circles will not be complete. For the sake of those for whom the holiday season is not such a happy one, the rest of us should try to bring a word of cheer and hope.

True enough much of the glitter and sparkle of Christmas will be temporarily a thing of the past. However, present conditions only tend to emphasize the underlying idea of the Christmas celebration.

This year our hearts will be full of the hope that soon again there will be "Peace on Earth, good will toward men."

For Cold Winter Nights

WITH the winter temperature of sleeping rooms suggested at a cool 50 degrees, it behooves us to lay away our lace and chiffon pretties for a few months and get into warm sleepers. Always on the alert for such changes, manufacturers of flannel-ette nightgowns and pajamas have quick like a flash restyled their wares, making them attractive to girls who like pretty lingerie, rather than keeping them in the dull but practical class.

Floral patterns vie with enchanting solid pastels for the new gowns; lace and braid trimmings are used.

"Anything Can Happen on the River", an eventful travel story set on the romantic Seine, giving a vivid picture of a part of France beloved by all travelers.

"Cross Creek" by the author of "The Yearling" has brilliant and fascinating descriptions of the Florida scenery—the orange groves, the swamps, the scattered homesteads—and of the animals and reptiles of the region which has been the author's home for almost a dozen years.

"The Captain from Connecticut" has the color of tropic lands, romance, high courage and high reading excitement in Mr. Forester's fine tale of a stalwart American. The time of the story is the 1812 war period.

Not only children, but adults, will find "Cedar Deer" entertaining and educational. This is the tale of a sturdy Maya boy who is virtually a slave on a coffee plantation in Guatemala.

"Trans-Atlantic Pilot", mainly for older boys, tells the very exciting story of Pilot Johnny Caruther's aviation problems.

Senior Girl Reserves discussed fully the annual Christmas party at their meeting Thursday. The girls voted to join the other high school clubs in giving this affair for the benefit of children chosen from the lower grades.

President Julia Jane Work appointed Elizabeth Downing to represent the club on the joint committee.

Treasurer Patty Owens announced that the club owed five dollars on its Community Chest pledge. This leaves a balance of ten dollars which will be paid later.

Elizabeth Downing urged the girls to bring in sales tax stamps, as this is the main source of the club's income.

The meeting was then turned over to Ruth Melvin, who passed out song sheets. The songs were ended by singing "Follow the Glean."

The president resumed her position as she reminded the girls to bring in excuses for their absences at church or at regular meetings. These should be presented preceding the following meeting.

HOME DEFENSE; SPEAKERS TOPIC
Thursday, the first period, Principal J. Wray Henry spoke to the high school pupils on the "Office of Civilian Defense." In this talk he gave the pupils further instructions and information.

He said that there are six divisions in the local setup. These are the fire, police and highway departments, medical association, public works department, and the air raid wardens.

There are five regional centers in the state of Ohio; Circleville's control center is Columbus.

He explained the reasons why Circleville might be bombed by the enemy. Some of these are the Scioto river bridge, canning factories, feed mills, paper plant and other industries in Circleville.

BANGLES SOLD IN ROOMS
Sale of tuberculosis bangles was announced in the various high school and junior high home rooms Friday morning. Teachers informed pupils that they might obtain these pins by donating one cent or more to the tuberculosis fund.

VOLLEY-BALL SCORES
Wednesday's third period class defeated Thursday's third period class in girls' volley-ball by the score of 54 to 17. Friday's third period class beat Monday's third period class 47 to 20.

DARBYVILLE
Mr. and Mrs. Elliott Justice and family of Circleville spent Sunday with Mrs. Mary T. Miller, Mrs. Marlene Swank and son Dick.

Miss Marlene Swank who is employed by the Kroger Baking Company spent the week end with Mr. and Mrs. Virgil Slagle and daughter Loretta.

EDITORIAL

CHRISTMAS IN WAR TIME

War will change many Christmas plans this year. The army, navy, and marines have called millions of men and women from their homes. Transportation difficulties prevent the absent ones from coming home. Gasoline rationing will also interfere with traditional treks to the city to shop and to take Junior to see Santa Claus.

There will no doubt be changes in gifts this year. Some people are shocked at the thought of exchanging presents, but really is it so shocking? Don't you feel the boys want us to carry on as before?

Most of us feel that we should try to have as normal a Christmas as is possible under existing conditions. Many family circles will not be complete. For the sake of those for whom the holiday season is not such a happy one, the rest of us should try to bring a word of cheer and hope.

True enough much of the glitter and sparkle of Christmas will be temporarily a thing of the past. However, present conditions only tend to emphasize the underlying idea of the Christmas celebration.

This year our hearts will be full of the hope that soon again there will be "Peace on Earth, good Will toward Men."

—Charles G. Will

JUNIOR RESERVES H E A R REPORTS

Business portion of the junior girl Reserves meeting consisted of reports of the treasurer, Francis Meinfelter, and Eloise Mogan, chairman of the Thanksgiving basket project.

Francis reminded the girls that their dues must be paid promptly. After Eloise's report Mrs. Alice Brown, the club's adviser, told the girls that the basket was a great success.

Norma Straight led the devotional program. "The Season of Advent" was her topic. She said that there are two sides to Christmas—the side of thinking of the Savior and that of remembering our relatives and friends with gifts.

SENIOR CLASS MEETS

Following the assembly, Tuesday afternoon, members of the senior class remained in the auditorium for a short meeting. At that time seniors received proofs of their class pictures. They also renewed the discussion of the school annual.

TWO FILMS PRESENTED

"Stephen Foster", a picture on the life of the famous composer of American folk songs, and "The University and The War" were two films enjoyed by pupils of Circleville high school Tuesday, the last period. A short "pep" rally followed the motion pictures. Eleven band members assisted the cheerleaders.

ODDS OF 3 TO 1 FAVOR CHICAGO TO KEEP TITLE

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12—You can get odds of 3 to 1 on the Chicago Bears to beat the Washington Redskins in their pro football championship game tomorrow, but it really isn't safe to bet even a plugged nickel on the contest.

All past records will be forgotten and the two clubs—the roughest, toughest teams in the National Pro league—will battle it out eye for eye and tooth for tooth—literally.

Despite the fact that the Bears are gunning for their third consecutive world's championship, the Redskins are still given a chance to avenge the 73 to 0 shellacking they took when the Chicago team won the title in 1940.

Ray Flaherty, the Redskins coach who will report for duty with the navy immediately after the game, predicts that his club will win, saying "we're as ready as we'll ever be, physically and mentally, and have no excuses for not winning the ball game Sunday."

The Redskins looked very good in their workouts and Slingin' Sammy Baugh, the game's outstanding passer who will lead the Washington attack, appeared to be in fine form.

After their arrival this morning, the Bears take over Griffith stadium for their final tneup. The Bears have been working out in Chicago during the last week and every member of the great team, including Fullback Bill Osmanski who has been laid up with injuries most of the season, was reported ready for action.

The Chicago team defeated the Redskins 38 to 14 in a pre-season exhibition game and it is confident that it will repeat the performance.

AAU TO OFFER PROGRAM FOR PHYSICAL FITNESS

CHICAGO, Dec. 12 — Dan Ferris, national secretary of the Amateur Athletic Union, today was to present to the organization's 54th annual convention details of a physical fitness play designed to improve the health of men and boys from 15 to 50.

The plan envisions participation of students, war-workers, office workers and others in eight competitive events.

Varying standards of accomplishments have been set for the different age groups, and, in addition, athletic rivalry would be fostered by competition in the events between firms, clubs, community organizations and other groups.

Even inter-city competition in the contests is contemplated in the program. The events include the 100-yard dash, high jump, -bstacle race, mile run, broad jump, half-mile run (in street shoes and with military pack), 12-pound shot put and bar chinning.

New York was named in honor of the Duke of York (1664), who got the patent from his brother, King Charles II of England, sent an expedition and took possession of New Netherlands.

LOU NOVA HURT. IN LOSING BOUT TO MAURIELLO

One Rib Broken, Another Dislocated In New York Contest

By Jack Mahon

NEW YORK, Dec. 12 — A restless, unhappy giant named Lou Nova was in the hospital today with one broken rib, another dislocated and a possible kidney injury.

And as he lay on his hospital bed awaiting the verdict of doctors which would tell whether or not anything was to remain of his shattered fistic life, the crowd of 15,369 fight fans who saw him fall on his face from a left pistoned by Tami Mauriello, must have agreed that Lou was game.

The fighter was hurt—and hurt bad—when he lay on the canvas groaning and made no attempt to rise in 2:43 of the sixth round of a scheduled ten-round at Madison Square Garden last night which the customers paid $39. 138.90 to see.

Assisted to his dressing room after the fight was given to Mauriello on a knockout, Nova, who has survived many weird and mad mystic theories of prize fighting complained of a pain in his left side and said breathing was difficult.

Boxing Commissioner Doctors William Walker and Vincent Nardello ordered him taken to St. Clare's hospital where x-rays disclosed the injuries.

It was a sudden climax to a wild, thrilling fight. Mauriello, who was dropped for a count of eight in the first round, was ahead three rounds to two on the International News Service score card going into the sixth.

He was the faster and sharper puncher of the pair and had been a few inches taller would have been much more effective.

Nova Was Rusty

Nova was in good shape but he was very slow following up his best blows, plainly was rusty and took considerable punishment before collapsing.

A right to the jaw dropped Tami early in the first round and taking no chances the young Italian wisely took a count of eight. He clinched and Nova was unable to take advantage of his big opportunity to score an upset over the 12 to 5 favorite.

Tami took the play away from Lou, who weighed 203 3-4 to Mauriello's 183 3-4, in the second. He opened a slight cut on Lou's left eye and won the heat all the way.

Both scored plenty of head punches in the third which Mauriello also took but Nova showed flashes of his old boxing form to jab Tami with a nice left at the fourth. Tami hit low in this round and was penalized by Referee Billy Cavanagh, but Nova had won it any way.

The fifth was very close. Nova's eye started to bleed again but he scored with some hard rights to the body. Tami did the more effective head punching, however, and we gave him the frame by a shade.

Then came the sixth, the sudden flurry in a neutral corner and Nova's amazing collapse.

Before he was taken to the hospital the California giant said he intended to continue fighting, after he took a rest at home. "I could have used a good tuneup fight," he admitted. "But I couldn't breathe when I got hit in the side in the sixth. If my rib is broken I think it happened in the fourth round—that's when my side started to hurt."

May Meet Bivins

Mauriello's manager, "Lefty" Remini, said he would confer with Promoter Mike Jacobs today on Tami's next start. He has been asked to accept a return bout with Jimmy Bivins, Cleveland, who holds a decision win over Tami but is not too enthused over the match because of Bivins' recent poor showing against Lee Savold here.

ODDS OF 3 TO 1 FAVOR CHICAGO TO KEEP TITLE

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12—You can get odds of 3 to 1 on the Chicago Bears to beat the Washington Redskins in their pro football championship game tomorrow, but it really isn't safe to bet even a plugged nickel on the contest.

All past records will be forgotten and the two clubs—the roughest, toughest teams in the National Pro league—will battle it out eye for eye and tooth for tooth—literally.

Despite the fact that the Bears are gunning for their third consecutive world's championship, the Redskins are still given a chance to average the 73 to 0 shellacking they took when the Chicago team won the title in 1940.

Ray Flaherty, the Redskins coach who will report for duty with the navy immediately after the game, predicts that his club will win, saying "we're as ready as well we'll be, physically and mentally, and have no excuses for not winning the ball game Sunday."

The Redskins looked very good in their workouts and Slingin' Sammy Baugh, the game's outstanding passer who will lead the Washington attack, appeared to be in fine form.

After their arrival this morning, the Bears take over Griffith stadium for their final tneup. The Bears have been working out in Chicago during the last week and every member of the great team, including Fullback Bill Osmani who has been laid up with injuries most of the season, was reported ready for action.

The Chicago team defeated the Redskins 38 to 14 in a pre-season exhibition game and it is confident that it will repeat the performance.

County Pours $176,810 Into War Bonds During November

Local Theatres Offer Varied Entertainment

$45,000 QUOTA FAR SURPASSED IN LOCAL DRIVE

Total Is Highest Figure Recorded Since Start Of Sales Effort

CIRCLEVILLE HEADS LIST

Ashville In Second Place, Williamsport Third In District Report

Pickaway countians poured $176,810 into Uncle Sam's War Bond and Stamp treasury during November when Earl A. Smith, county War Bond chairman, declared that the district's quota of $45,000 was passed almost fourfold.

The total announced by Mr. Smith by the Federal Reserve bank in Cleveland was the largest recorded at any time here since War Bonds and Stamps went on sale.

Mr. Smith said that much of the increase could be traced to individuals who were transferring holdings to War Bonds and Stamps of the "G" type which bear interest every six months. Of the total of $176,810 on bonds and stamps purchased during the month, $140,416 was in series "G" bonds.

Series "E" bonds, commonly known as the people's bond, brought a total sales of $36,394.

For the first time in the War Bond and Stamp campaign the Federal Reserve bank reported sales by localities.

Pickaway county's tabulation for November follows:

Town "E" Bonds "F-G" Bonds
Ashville	$ 7,968 5,348
Circleville	21,318 134,068
Conn. Point	468
Darbyville	18
New Holland	1,612 1,000
Orient	216
Williamsport	4,799

Mr. Smith said that efforts are under way to organize school teachers of the city and county into Bond and Stamp units, the hope of the War Savings committee being that every educator in the district sign up to spend 10 percent of his or her salary for Bonds and Stamps.

Richard, McAllister, who has been doing a yeoman job in organizing industries in the city, has been assigned the school project by Chairman Smith. Mr. McAllister met this week with Circleville teachers for a discussion of the program, stating the War Bond and Stamp 10 Percent Club plan. After he concluded his discussion with the teachers members of the school staff continued their conference. Mr. McAllister has not yet been informed of the decision reached by the educators.

A similar movement is under way in the county school system with Superintendent George D. McDowell sending questionnaires to each school superintendent asking that names of teachers wishing to participate in the 10 percent program be signed. Results of the county-wide campaign are not known either.

CONEY F. NANCE IN JAIL FACING INCEST CHARGE

Coney Fred Nance, 47, of Monroe township, was held in county jail Saturday awaiting hearing before Justice of the Peace B. T. Hedges on statutory charges involving a 17-year-old daughter, who is an expectant mother. Investigation completed Saturday by the sheriff's office and juvenile court disclosed that, according to Prosecutor George Gerhardt, Nance, a World War I veteran, has been committing violations against his daughter for more than a year.

Testimony of several of the girl's five brothers and sisters was taken Friday afternoon prior to charges being prepared. Gerhardt said Nance would be charged with incest.

The Monroe township man's attentions were directed toward his daughter shortly after his wife died over a year ago, deputies who investigated the affair charge. The girl finally fled to the home of her grandmother, Mrs. Hannah Vannoy in Mount Sterling. The girl, Marjorie Ann Nance, and a brother, Emmitt, 16, have been made wards of juvenile court by Judge Lemuel Weldon, who has placed them in care of the maternal grandmother. Four other Nance children, Patricia, 14; Mary 11; Glenn, 7, and Freddie, 4, were sent to the Pickaway county children's home Friday by the judge.

Nance was arrested Friday by Sheriff Charles Radcliff and Juvenile Officer John Kerns of Mount Sterling. They and Deputy Vern Pontious had been seeking him for the last two days.

The Nance girl told authorities that her father had encouraged her to have 'dates' with a married Monroe township man. She denied to authorities that her father is the father of her child.

Many an Army official is over-cautious about speaking for publication these days, but not Lt. Gen. "Hap" Arnold, Commander of the Army Air Forces.

Disclosing that U. S. fliers are being turned out of pre-flight schools at the rate of 40,000 a year, Arnold was asked if the figures could be quoted.

"Why not?" he chuckled. "It won't do any harm. Might do a lot of good. It'll show the Germans how many we've got!"

JEFFERSON MEMORIAL

The new statue of Thomas Jefferson for the Jefferson Memorial in Washington is so big that it will be put together, piece by piece. Then next Spring the statue of the great Democrat—19 feet high—will be stretched out on a couple of big trucks and rolled into the new marble memorial among the cherry trees along the Tidal Basin.

"Jefferson" is being constructed in a Westport, Conn., studio by sculptor Rudolph Evans, who was awarded the contract for $32,000. Though the statue will be bronze in final form, it is now clay—and much smaller than 19 feet. Sculptor Evans is engaged in the task of enlarging the clay figure from life-size to three times life-size.

A 19-foot bronze statue sounds heavy, but actually it will be hollow, with the bronze only three-sixteenths of an inch thick. The statue will be cast in a dozen pieces, set up for inspection, then taken apart for shipment to Washington.

Thus far, sculptor Evans has not encountered priority troubles in securing materials for the statue—but it remains to be seen whether WPB will let him have the bronze.

HEART AILMENT ENDS CAREER OF CHARLES B. WISE

Charles B. Wise, 78, died Friday at 2:30 p. m. at his home in Washington township, death coming in the house in which he was born. However, Mr. Wise lived for some years in Stoutsville, returning to the family home in later years.

Mr. Wise was prominent in Washington township and Stoutsville affairs for many years, being engaged in the funeral directing business, as a carpenter, rural mail carrier and hardware and general store operator. He served as a mail carrier long enough to be placed on retirement.

Death came after several months of heart disease.

Mr. Wise was a son of David and Mahala Bolender Wise. Survivors include a daughter, Mrs. Harry Waldeich, Circleville Route 4; two sons, Talmer, Circleville fire chief, and Jasie, also of Circleville; nine grandchildren; two nieces, Mrs. Jennie Mowery and Mrs. Budd Harden. A son, Paul, died at the age of three.

Funeral will be Sunday at 2:30 p. m. in the Defenbaugh chapel, the Rev. Harold Dutt officiating. Burial will be in Maple Hill cemetery, Stoutsville. The body will be at the funeral home after 2 p. m. Saturday when friends may call.

DRUNK DRIVING CHARGE LAID TO COLUMBUS MAN

Frank B. Gay, 37, of Harrisburg pike, Columbus, was lodged in county jail Friday afternoon to await hearing for driving when intoxicated. Gay was arrested by Deputy Sheriff Bryan Custer after his GMC one and one-half ton truck went off the road near the Franklin county line on Route 23 and was wrecked.

Gay had been driving it from one side of the road to the other, the deputy was told. Custer said there is a possibility that his truck might have sideswiped at least two automobiles.

Gay was uninjured when his truck went off the road, and Frank Shaeffer, 65, of Columbus, riding with him, also escaped without injury.

Irvin Patrick Shows Surprising Ability in Hunting and Trapping

Clarence Francis, Pickaway county's game protector, is convinced that he is working with a super-huntsman. That was the title he gave Irvin Patrick, his 30-year-old aide, Friday when he discussed some of Patrick's work during the present game season.

"That fellow has a nose for game, and a knack of stalking it that cannot be equalled," the conservation officer said, in recounting Patrick's activities during which he has bagged nine red foxes, eight with firearms and one with a trap.

Francis recalled a trip into Deer Creek township in which Patrick bagged a fox that Francis couldn't even see. The two men were riding on a rural road along the White Campbell farm when Patrick told his driver to stop, telling him that he had seen a fox in the field. "I looked into that field for several minutes," Francis said, "and I still couldn't see the fox even though Irvin counted the corn shocks and told me how many feet to look in a certain direction. The fox was actually in the middle of a 30 acre field and Patrick was able to see his ears above the grass and stubble."

Patrick left the car and sneaked up on the fox, but just as he prepared for a shot the fox jumped into a broken tile making his escape. But that didn't stop Patrick. He set a trap, and the next morning the tenant on the Campbell farm called that a fox had been caught.

Another time the youthful hunter, who got his training in Colorado and New Mexico as a coyote hunter for Uncle Sam, stalked a fox through a corn field, had several shots at him with his rifle, missed, and then killed him with a pistol shot.

"It's just a knack that comes with long training," Francis declared in discussing his buddy's work. He recalled that a few weeks ago Patrick stalked a fox through a field and couldn't make any headway, the fox staying just far enough ahead of the hunter that he couldn't get a good shot. Patrick climbed a tree that day, the game protector said, located the fox, circled it and then shot it.

The conservation officer said that Patrick, who lives on the Kingston pike with relatives, can figure nine times out of ten just where a fox will leave a field in its flight. "He figures the wind, the sun, and several other factors in deciding where a fox will run, and nearly always he is right," he declared.

Patrick assigned during the Summer to Buckeye Lake by the state conservation department, is making many Pickaway county farmers happy through his ability to destroy foxes. These animals cause a lot of damage on a farm during a year's time. Red foxes may be killed throughout the year in this county, the game protector pointed out.

Quite a number of farmers took advantage of this offer and we are very grateful for their cooperation. Won't MORE of you do it next week?

Just call 118 the day before the sale. This will give us a better chance to "pool" our trips, and when we can do that we are conserving gasoline and rubber for our Fighting Men!

LET THE NAZIS KNOW

Many an Army official is overcautious about speaking for publication these days, but not Lt. Gen. "Hap" Arnold, Commander of the Army Air Forces. Disclosing that U. S. fliers are being turned out of pre-flight schools at the rate of 40,000 a year, Arnold was asked if the figures could be quoted.

"Why not?" he chuckled. "It won't do any harm. Might do a lot of good. It'll show the Germans how many we've got."

CAPITAL CHAFF

Best diplomatic post for Democratic National Chairman Ed Flynn would be Minister to Ireland, replacing Mrs. Roosevelt's relative. Ed is Irish, would carry great prestige in Dublin, and we need a big shot diplomat in Ireland to win over the Irish, none too pleased at having U. S. troops in Belfast. . . . Instead of Ireland, there is talk of sending Ed Flynn to New Zealand. . . . Civilian members of the French Embassy in Washington wish they were in the swanky hotel at Hershey, Pa. Only the Ambassador and his military staff were interned, leaving other French diplomats, most of them sympathetic to the U. S. A., on their own. Their salaries, however, have been cut off and they are nearing the bottom of the barrel. . . . Despite frowns from Vice President Wallace, Undersecretary of State Welles and Milo Perkins that Maj. or Tom Armstrong of Standard Oil was persona non grata with Latin Americans, WPB's "Eber" Eberstadt has promoted him. He is now Eber's executive assistant.

JEFFERSON MEMORIAL

The new statue of Thomas Jefferson for the Jefferson Memorial in Washington is so big that it will be put together, piece by piece. Then next Spring the statue of the great Democrat—19 feet high—will be stretched out on a couple of big trucks and rolled into the new marble memorial among the cherry trees along the Tidal Basin.

"Jefferson" is being constructed in a Westport, Conn. studio by sculptor Rudolph Evans, who was awarded the contract for $32,000. Though the statue will be bronze in final form, it is now clay—and much smaller than 19 feet. Sculptor Evans is engaged in the task of enlarging the clay figure from life-size to three times life-size.

A 19-foot bronze statue sounds heavy, but actually it will be hollow, with the bronze only three-sixteenths of an inch thick. The statue will be cast in a dozen pieces, set up for inspection, then taken apart for shipment to Washington.

Thus far, sculptor Evans has not encountered priority troubles in securing materials for the statue—but it remains to be seen whether WPB will let him have the bronze.

DRUNK DRIVING CHARGE LAID TO COLUMBUS MAN

Frank B. Gay, 37, of Harrisburg pike, Columbus, was lodged in county jail Friday afternoon to await hearing for driving when intoxicated. Gay was arrested by Deputy Sheriff Bryan Custer after his GMC one and one-half ton truck went off the road near the Franklin county line on Route 23 and was wrecked.

Gay had been driving it from one side of the road to the other, the deputy was told. Custer said there is a possibility that his truck might have sideswiped at least two automobiles.

Gay was uninjured when his truck went off the road, and Frank Shaeffer, 65, of Columbus, riding with him, also escaped without injury.

Irvin Patrick Shows Surprising Ability in Hunting and Trapping

Clarence Francis, Pickaway county's game protector, is convinced that he is working with a super-huntsman. That was the title he gave Irvin Patrick, his 30-year-old aide, Friday when he discussed some of Patrick's work during the present game season.

"That fellow has a nose for game, and a knack of stalking it that cannot be equalled," the conservation officer said, in recounting Patrick's activities during which he has bagged nine red foxes, eight with firearms and one with a trap.

Francis recalled a trip into Deercreek township in which Patrick bagged a fox that Francis couldn't even see. The two men were riding on a rural road along the White Campbell farm when Patrick told his driver to stop, telling him that he had seen a fox in the field. "I looked into that field for several minutes," Francis said, "and I still couldn't see the fox even though Irvin counted the corn shocks and told me how many feet to look in a certain direction. The fox was actually in the middle of a 30 acre field and Patrick was able to see his ears above the grass and stubble."

Patrick left the car and sneaked up on the fox, but just as he prepared for a shot the fox jumped into a broken tile making his escape. But that didn't stop Patrick. He set a trap, and the next morning the tenant on the Campbell farm called that a fox had been caught.

Another time the youthful hunter, who got his training in Colorado and New Mexico as a coyote hunter for Uncle Sam, stalked a fox through a corn field, had several shots at him with his rifle, missed, and then killed him with a pistol shot.

"It's just a knack that comes with long training," Francis declared in discussing his buddy's work. He recalled that a few weeks ago Patrick stalked a fox through a field and couldn't make any headway, the fox staying just far enough ahead of the hunter that he couldn't get a good shot. Patrick climbed a tree that day, the game protector said, located the fox, circled it and then shot it.

The conservation officer said that Patrick, who lives on the Kingston pike with relatives, can figure nine times out of ten just where a fox will leave a field in its flight. "He figures the wind, the sun, and several other factors in deciding where a fox will run, and nearly always he is right," he declared.

Patrick assigned during the Summer to Buckeye Lake by the state conservation department, is making many Pickaway county farmers happy through his ability to destroy foxes. These animals cause a lot of damage on a farm during a year's time. Red foxes may be killed throughout the year in this county, the game protector pointed out.

THANKS, FARMERS-- for your splendid cooperation

Last week we asked the farmers of Pickaway County to cooperate with your local association when they had livestock to move on sale days — or any other day in the week. We promised to save you money on transportation costs by picking up stock from several farmers on the same trip.

Quite a number of farmers took advantage of this offer and we are very grateful for their cooperation. Won't MORE of you do it next week?

Just call 118 the day before the sale. This will give us a better chance to "pool" our trips, and when we can do that we are conserving gasoline and rubber for our Fighting Men!

Please Continue your Kind Cooperation
